Чомакома, June 22вр. 1883.

THE importance of the province of Szechuen. both as a market for imports and also as an exporter of produce, has for some years been known, but so far very little trouble has been taken by the Chinese Authorities or by foreign merchants to render it accessible. At present what foreign trade is carried on | yesterday morning, we learn that things are still with Szechuen is conducted at Hankow and Ichang: at the former port goods are either | rival of the reinforcements from France was daily transhipped into a small steamer for Ichang. there to be again transhipped, into native boats for Chungking, or by native craft direct; while at Ichang cargo is simply ship, great many that she was a transport with reped in native boats which laboriously ascend the rapids with it to Chungking. . The difficulties of transit on the Upper Yangtsze are | Annamese fortress, the name of which we were considerable and serve to check the expansion of the trade. Notwithstanding the river but they did not see her firing. At difficulties, however, the trade in imports is steadily progressing. We note that Mr. MORGAN, Commissioner of Customs at business. The trade of the town does not seem Ichnug, in his report on the trade of that to have been much interfered with by the port, mentions that test year a shipment of Government lead and some copper ore from | cargo Szechuen were made at Ichang. The conper comes from a district lying to the South-West of I tu, said to contain one of the richest known deposits of copper ore in the world. The want of proper roads and the consequent cost of conveying the ore to the nearest waterways is so great that the enterprise cannot be prosecuted with sufficient profit to encourage the export. In order to develope the trade of the vast and wealthy province of Szechuen it will be necessary, first, to run | the Hovas. light draught steamers up to Chungking, and, secondly, to open up roads to the most important mining districts. Until this is done the growth of trade with Szechuen must necessarily be slow. Mr. Morgan strongly advocates the extension of steam communication to Chungking from Ichang, and is also of opinion that the trade would warrant the running of a through steamer from Shanghai to Ichang, thus saving the cost of transhipment at Hankow, and securing large import cargoes. There was some talk last year of a small steamer being placed passengers and valuables, in consequence of What I complain of is that so many persons on be appointed to succeed Sir Herry Parkes. an accident which befol General Pao and his family at the Chi-kuan-shih Rapid in July last, when two of his sons and other members of the party were drowned. project, and it is more than probable that - admitted. like many other Chinese official schemes are lost every year in making the ascent of Government to action, the loss of any num- operas. bar of boatmen will fail to move them. It is much more likely that a foreign fru. trade, will put a suitable boat on the river to run to Changking. That the trade with Szechuen is extensive may be gathered from a table drawn up by Mr. Mongan (and out of 5,479,586 pieces Grey Shirtings int. | too, I am told, were good.

average of 18 per cent. The exports are very various and might outily be greatly increased. Among other things the Szechuen opium, great quantities of which are carried down the river in native boats, would be shipped in the steamer, as a safer and more expeditious mode of transport for a valuable cargo. Altogether there is excellent ground for believing that the trade with Farther China is only in its infancy, and is susceptible of onormous development.

There are difficulties in the way. The extent of land at the company's disposal is not sufficient for the construction of a second canal. Negotiations must be tried and the whole question must be thoroughly studied. The gist of the matter is that the Canal Company's Works Committee in idea the principle of a second canal, subject to a variety of conditions, and with no hint whatever as to the time at which the thing is to be done. It could hardly be expected that so indefinite an arrangement as this would satisfy British shipowners.
